“ I often think of the Stinchcomb family and especially at Christmas. I was online looking for someone else and just discovered Janie's passing last spring. She was such a dear lady and my 2nd mother during my high school years, when I was at her house so often. She was always smiling and made me feel so welcome in her home. I could never turn down an invitation to a dinner with her delicious mashed potatoes.

Janie and Harold raised the most special daughter, who was my best friend in life. I think of Carol so often and even though I don't see her or talk to her, she is a part of me. We exchange Christmas cards each year and I have one here that I haven't opened yet, but I will. I was saving it for Christmas, but now I will need to open it sooner. I will have to wait until some of my crocodile tears stop just so I can see.

This makes my own mother's passing 5 years earlier all the more fresh. Carol, I know this holiday season will be sad for you, so sad. I felt so blessed to have had my mother for 67 years and you have me beaten, but I won't tell the world how old we are. If I had known of this, I would have been praying, but I can start now.

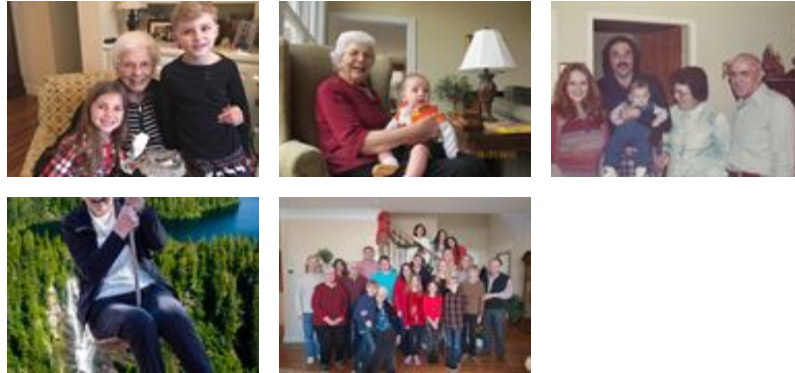

You know I loved your mother, Carol, as I love you, always. Lyn
