“ And even though when that all that fun was over and all the rest of the leaves needed to be cleaned up and bagged which generally was 50 or so bags. The girls still felt that even though we all worked hard, the pay off was well worth the effort. We just cleaned up Mrs. Johnson's leaves a week ago, and planned on touching it up in the next few days again. Only this time there will be no thank you card or a shake of the finger telling me that I'm a troublemaker for doing it, as Mrs. Johnson health has been fading and she has spent sometime in the hospital. Thankfully, we got to see her a few times in the last week or so, and let her know her yard was in tip top shape and even brought her the picture of the girls playing in the leaves. Just a week or so ago, she was still watching Badger and Packer games and...well let's say she was none to happy of the outcome. Mrs. Laura Johnson passed away Tuesday morning at the age of 91. I am honored to have met her and spend time with her before she left us. I'm even more honored that such a great lady played a very important role in one of the most important lessons my girls will ever learn. RIP my friend.

“ For the last few years, my daughters and I would clean up all the leaves in Mrs. Johnson's yard for her, usually more than once as the neighborhood leaves would make it back into her yard. Usually a day or two later we would receive a small envelope addressed to Adam and Girls in legible but shaky penmanship. It would contain a white thank you card, $20 and a note that she appreciated what we did for her and to take the girls out for pizza. It was signed, Laura. Every time we got that thank you card I would show the girls the card and money and we would walk over and even though Mrs. Johnson would absolutely insist we took it, we always returned the money. I was finally able to convince Mrs. Johnson last year that we cleaning her yard is no problem at all. That it actually is a very good lesson for the girls. It shows them that if they work hard by raking the leaves, they get to enjoy all the fun of jumping, diving, swimming and kart wheeling into the enormous pile they created, followed by filling their numerous pumpkin and spider leaf bags to decorate for Halloween.
