“ Although I wasn't as close to Nancy as the years took us to different places, she was a constant, encouraging and humorous friend in my life. It all began when we drank Coke (I wasn't allowed to have it at home and I was so impressed Nancy could have a bottle whenever she wanted!) and smoked cigarettes in her basement. We could be naughty like that and then enjoy Sunday School together the next day. In High School, Nancy was incredibly mature next to those of us who were ridiculously self-centered and insecure. Her common sense and sharp wit were beyond her years. Nancy had a fierce loyalty to her hometown and the people who lived there. She will be missed by so many. The last time I was with her, she glowingly spoke of her faith and her relationship with her priest. This gives me comfort. She was also quick to brag about her amazing, attentive husband. One thing I know - Heaven is having a party right now and Nancy is loving it!
