“ Mrs. Farr was a paraprofessional in my elementary school back in the early 90's. I remember her dearly; she was my favorite person to see when I'd get off the bus because she'd holler down the hall and throw her arms out for a big hug. She called me her "big booger," and my younger sister was her "little booger." But what I remember most about her, though, was how she never let you quit anything. She'd make me go back to the library every day, even though I hated it, and she made me read book after book so I could go to the class ice cream party. She'd tell me she loved me and then go find a book and put it in my hand. She introduced me to the Nancy Drew series, and she is entirely the reason I love reading, and she's also the reason I became a teacher in college. Mrs. Farr meant the world to a six-year-old little girl. Rest in peace.
